Every Friday I went to a senior nursing home. It seemed as if it needed _____, but little did I know it would help me too.

During my _____ visit, I helped to polish (擦光) some ladies' nails (指甲). One woman asked me many questions. After she was satisfied with my answers, she started to share some of her hidden hurt. By listening to her, I realized I had helped her a lot: she looked _____ from some of her past pains.

When she finished, she told me _____ that encouraged me to visit the nursing home for the second time and the following every week. She said, "You're the only person I was able to tell this to. The other volunteers are too busy to _____ me. You'll come back next week, right?" After hurriedly blowing on her newly coated nails, I smiled and _____, "Yes, I'll see you next Friday." That day, I was pleased by the _____ that I had helped somebody. I realized an action as simple as listening became something much more.

During every second I spent there, I realized how much of a difference my _____ could have on the lives of others. The hardest part of living there is that it breaks the human connection _____ those in today's society and the nursing home.

Every moment I spend chatting is a chance to tie that connection again, to share their worries, and to shape someone's life. In turn, that _____ also shapes me. I not only learn about life and experiences outside of school, but also receive the gift of being part of this process—this connection between humans.
