The yearly Marathon (马拉松) in my town usually happened during a heat wave. My job was to follow the runners in an ambulance (救护车), for _____ of them might need medical attention.

"We're supposed to stay _____ the last runner, so take it slowly," I said to the driver, Doug, as the race started. The front-runners started to _____ and then my eyes were drawn to the woman in blue silk running shorts and a loose white T-shirt .

We knew we were already watching our "last runner". There was something wrong with her _____, so it seemed almost impossible for her to be able to walk. A marathon was really a challenge.

Doug and I watched in silence as she slowly moved forward. _____, she was the only runner left in sight. Tears ran down my face _____ I watched her push forward with great efforts through the last miles.

When the finish line came into sight, rubbish lay everywhere and the _____ crowds had long gone home. Yet, straight and ever so proud stood a lone man. He was holding one end of a ribbon (缎带) tied to a post. She slowly crossed through, _____ both ends of the ribbon fluttering (飘扬) behind her.

I do not know this woman's name, but that day she became part of my life — a part that I often _____. When think things are too difficult or I get "I-just-can't-do-it," I think of the last runner. For her, it wasn't about beating the other runners or winning a prize, but about finishing what she had set out to do, no matter what. Then I realize how _____ the task before me really is.
