I am a perfectionist. I always try to do as much research as possible for role. For Taxi Driver I did actually drive a cab for a few weeks. It probably wasn't necessary, but it was something I wanted to do.

I've realized how important it is to appreciate the things your parents leave behind. My father, Robert DeNiro Snr, died in 1993. Since then, I've kept his studio intact, just the way he left it. I thought about getting rid of it, but my family and I gathered there after his death and realized the reality is different to seeing it in pictures, so it stayed.

There is much more opportunity now than when I was starting out. There really was only TV and films made in California. Now the Internet has created so many more opportunities for actors.

I learned a lot about being a father from my father. I knew he loved me. It was important for me to know that, so I know it's important for my kids to know it, too. I give my kids space, but we do spend a lot of time together. I guess I can be firm when necessary. I have four grandchildren and six children so I know what I'm talking about.

I understand why people use social media, but I don't. No way! I don't watch much TV or go to the movies either. To me, they're just another distraction. And I have enough of those to worry about without all that staff as well.

Fame is not an issue for me these days. When I was younger, I found the attention difficult to deal with, but I'm mostly OK with it now. I go around quite freely and people may say "hello" or want a photo and that's fine for me.

A perfectly good cupboard just sat by the dustbin in the parking lot. Probably it was something they were getting rid of, I thought.

My family was in need of all the extra storage space we could find at this point. We were living on top
