阅读下面的短文，然后按照要求写一篇150词左右的英语短文。

When I was a teenager, my dad did everything he could to advise me against becoming a brewer (啤酒制造者). He didn't even want me anywhere near a vat (酿酒用的桶). So I did as he asked. I got good grades and went to Harvard.

In the second year, I began to realize that I'd never done anything but go to school. So, at 24 I decided to drop out (辍学) for some time. Obviously, my parents didn't think this was a great idea. But I felt strongly that one can't wait till he is 65 to do what he wants to in life. Having worked for 2 years, I went back to Harvard to continue my study.

After graduation, I got a highly-paid job in Boston. After working there five years, I wondered, "Is this what I want to be doing when I'm 50?" At that time, Americans spent good money on beer in low quality. Why not make good beer for Americans? I thought.

I decided to quit my job to become a brewer. When I told Dad, he was astonished, but in the end he supported me. Six weeks later, at the Great American Beer Festival, my Sam Adams Boston Lager (淡啤酒) won the top prize for American beer. In the end I was destined (注定) to be a brewer. My advice to the young is simple: decide by yourselves not your seniors what you should do for a life when you are young.
