During a career planning class, Brenda Fabian asked how many students use Facebook, a popular online networking community for college students. Almost everyone in the room raised a hand. "Then I asked how many knew that employers are reviewing Facebook for hiring purposes," says Fabian, director for Center for Career Services at Susquehanna University. "No hands were raised, and their faces revealed the students' surprise."

Although some parents do keep track of their teen's online activities, most teenagers don't realize that websites may be monitored by schools, prospective 未来的 employers or anyone else who might be interested in the teenager's lifestyle not just today but anytime in the future.

Most of us don't realize that the information that gets posted on the Internet may be deleted, but it doesn't disappear permanently. "The stuff is there forever," says Jamie Riehle, director of Web Publishing at Lycos. "It is backed up (备份) on servers and doesn't go away."

As company recruiters, college admission officers, law enforcement personnel and parents become more Web savvy (有见识的), it becomes even more vital for teenagers to be cautious when posting any information on their websites. Even though sites that are private can be seen only by a preselected list of friends, there are companies that, for a fee, can dig deeper into cyberspace (网络空间) and find anything. Even government officials who thought that deleting email would exonerate (宣布……无罪) them from wrongdoing are discovering that, on the Web, there is no such thing as private or gone forever.

Steven Rothenberg, president and founder of College Recruiter.com, suggests that teenagers think of their Web posts as tattoos (纹身). "Inherently (内在地), there is nothing wrong with them if they are private," he says. "But if they are visible or offensive, it can affect the way others see you."

Everyone has got two personalities—the one that is shown to the world and the other that is secret and real. You don't show your secret personality when you are awake because you can control your behavior, but when you are asleep, your sleeping position shows the real you. In a normal night, of course, people frequently change their positions. The important position is the one that you go to sleep in.

If you go to sleep on your back, you're a very open person. You normally trust people and you are easily influenced by fashion or new ideas. You don't like to displease people. So you never express your real feelings. You're quite shy and you aren't quite sure of yourself.

If you sleep on your stomach, you are a rather secretive person. You worry a lot and you're always easily upset. You always stick to your own opinions or judgment, but you don't raise your hope too much. You usually live for today not tomorrow. This means that you enjoy having a good time.

If you sleep curled up, you are probably a very nervous person. You have a low opinion of yourself and so you're often defensive (防卫的). You're shy and you don't normally like meeting people. You prefer to be on your own. You're easily hurt.

If you sleep on your side, you have usually got a wellbalanced personality. You know your strength and weakness. You're usually careful. You trust yourself. You
